According to Dow Jones’ classification, Hong Kong SAR belongs to the Asia-Pacific region, while Mainland China and Taiwan belong to the emerging market category which includes Chinese companies headquartered in Hong Kong. Dow Jones Sustainability Indices have been long regarded as internationally-recognised benchmarks that measure social responsibility and sustainable development. Launched in 1999, the DJSI are compiled by Dow Jones and the RobecoSAM Group, an investment specialist focused on sustainable investing, on an annual basis. Using a “best-in-class” approach, the DJSI assess the performance of the world’s leading sustainable development corporations based on economic, environmental and social criteria, and evaluate corporations’ sustainable development capabilities from an investment perspective.

Mr. Wang Tianyi, CEO of Everbright International, said, “As a leading player in China’s environmental protection industry, Asia’s largest waste-to-energy project investor and operator and a world-renowned environmental protection company, Everbright International strives to achieve its sustainable development goals through four aspects, namely green technology, green operation, green capital and green responsibility. The Group’s inclusion in DJSI this year once again reflects that its sustainable development efforts have been well recognised, and shows that the Group is in a world-leading position in the sustainable development area.”

Mr. Wang Tianyi continued, “It is Everbright International’s aspiration to ‘Create More Business Value and Undertake More Social Responsibility’. Looking ahead, we will continue striving to seize opportunities and ride on the good momentum to continuously enhance the Group’s professionalism, marketisation and internationalisation. We are also committed to facilitating the development of the environmental protection cause with the Chinese characteristics and a global vision.”
