Company Operation Information (Cont.)

From a seasonal perspective, January is in the traditional low season. The property market usually enters into a “latent period” from the beginning of the new year towards the Chinese New Year. This period usually sees varying degrees of shrinkages in transaction volumes and amounts across the country as the market adopts this CNY momentum. During the month of January, leveraging its balanced layout in first-, second- and third-tier cities, Fantasia’s property business unit grasped the window of opportunity for the grand home-return movement, pinpointed both owner-occupier demand and living-improvement demand and implemented flexible sales strategies, thereby achieved encouraging sales results. During the period, the Group achieved high levels of demand for visits in projects located in Suzhou, Wuhan, Chengdu, Huizhou, Guilin, Nangjing and Tianjin, etc., sustaining the sale momentum.

Mr. Pan Jun, Chairman of Fantasia said: “Against the backdrop of inhibiting investment and speculative demand via purchase and mortgage borrowing restrictions, the Group expanded its market foothold ahead of schedule during the January low-season: The Group endeavored efforts in in-depth research to identify features and demand of potential buyers during CNY, seeking to meet demand at different levels and perspectives through reasonable product line planning. The Group implemented integrated online and offline sales backed by scientific and high efficiency marketing strategies, thereby achieved steady year-on-year growth in contracted sales, pathing a good start for sales for the rest of the year.

2017 marks a critical year for Fantasia’s evolvement into an industrial financial group based on community services. The Group proactively faces the complex and fast-changing market environment, adheres to its industrial financial + light/heavy-asset integrated development direction based on its strategic planning. It perseveres in its preset business strategy and attaches importance to risk management while persistently pursues innovative transformation to achieve rapid, steady and healthy development.
